

MODEL BIRTH FOR JOVOVICH

Supermodel Milla Jovovich says having a baby has made her feel like a 'real woman'. The 31-year-old, who is engaged to Resident Evil director Paul Anderson, gave birth to Ever Gabo in LA on Saturday. During her pregnancy Jovovich said: 'I've discovered what it is to be a real woman.'

JOLIE'S BLUSHES OVER NUDITY

Angelina Jolie has admitted feeling 'shy' about her latest nude scene – even though it was digitally animated. The 32-year-old who takes the part of a killer lizard in the epic Beowulf said: 'I didn't expect ourselves to come out as much. I didn't expect it to feel as real. I was really surprised that I felt that exposed.'

AMY DID SHOW 'FOR HER FAMILY'

Amy Winehouse has defended her poor performance and non-existent acceptance speech at the European MTV Music Awards. The 24-year-old said she dislikes award shows, adding: 'I was knackered after my own gigs in Europe. My family loves awards shows so I agreed to do it for them.'

KYLIE HEALTH NO PROBLEM

Kylie Minogue has dismissed rumours that she's cancelled her world tour after doctors told her it could hamper her recovery from breast cancer. A statement from the diminutive diva's management said she was in excellent health and that she may tour in future. At present she is doing promotional work for her album and new single 2 Hearts.

News from the MOLEHILL

Which US actress, known for her screen roles as the lovable fool, deserves an Emmy according to fellow cast and crew considering how nasty she is off screen? The actress has fooled the world with the nice girl image, when in reality she likes nothing more than making life miserable for her co-stars...

A LITTLE BRIT 'OVERHYPED'

Little Britain was hyped, admits star David Walliams. 'We'd have been happy to be less successful. We were hyped, and that means you have an in-built shelf life.' Walliams told the Radio Times: 'It's pleasing to be part of the zeitgeist, but worrying because we were over-exposed. People see so much of you they want to laugh at something else.'

Gervais: Get hitched? It's just a laugh

Ricky Gervais says he will never get married, despite dating his girlfriend, Jane Fallon, for 20 years. The Extras star said: 'It's not that we don't believe in marriage, we just don't see the point. To all intents and purposes we are. We've got the will, the deed – we just don't have the toaster.' The 46-year-old also claimed he didn't care about being a star. 'I didn't go into the industry because I wanted to be famous. The fact that I'll be recognised walking out of a chip shop doesn't excite me in the slightest,' he added. 'If someone said to me you can either work hard and do The Office or win Pop Idol and the lottery at the same time, I'd do The Office.' Gervais made his comments during an uncharacteristically serious interview with Tesco magazine about his life. He claimed the man behind Office prat David Brent is really a simple guy. 'I'm very lucky to do a job that allows me to have a laugh and be creative,' he said. The Bafta-winning comic insisted his inner circle kept him grounded. 'I work with Steve Merchant, my writing partner, I live with Jane and surround myself with family and friends. Trust me, they don't tell me how brilliant I am,' he said. Gervais also spoke about the final Extras episode this Christmas, saying: 'It's going to be like a feature-length movie and I'm proud of it.' The full interview appears in the Christmas edition of Tesco magazine.
